Auto-contouring of OARs aims to reduce delineation time and effort, and to improve inter-observer consistency , , . Atlas-based auto-contouring (ABAS) is a widely used method in which a set of representative patients with carefully delineated OARs serve as a reference set (i.e. atlas) for contouring new patients , . OAR contours of the atlas patient(s) are registered to new patients in order to transform (usually with a deformation) and combine their OAR contours in the new scan.
