Asking questions, even the right questions, won't help you find the answer or solve the problem if you don't listen—really listen—to answers to those questions. Questions can serve many purposes, but most of all, they allow people to be a legitimate part of the decision-making process and, ultimately, the answer or solution to the problem.

Asking the right questions is key to finding the right answers

I hope these questions serve you well in the times ahead. I wrote these for myself based on what I know best serve me when I feel panicked, disconnected, or cooped up. The idea is to ask the questions, but not stress the answers. Life under (and—let's be real—even before) COVID-19 is stressful enough without adding to the to-do list.
