From a GMAT perspective, here's what to take away from this little anecdote. GMAT probability and combinatorics are counterintuitive for everyone. I majored in math in college – I even took a couple of courses on probability – and I still can't solve these problems by intuiting which formulas to use.

Manhattan Review GMAT Combinatorics & Probability Guide ...

I've only recently started to review probability and combinatorics, so this may be a very ignorant question. Anyway, I came across a Kaplan Youtube video on the topic that offered some practice questions. The solution to one entailed using Permutation formula, which I don't believe is in any of the Manhattan Prep chapters on Combinatorics. Am I ...
