Adonais Summary

Bysshe Shelley wrote the poem "Adonais" (1821) in honor of his good friend, John Keats, who had died earlier that year from tuberculosis at the age of twenty-five. Its title refers to the Greek mythological figure Adonis, the handsome young lover of the god Aphrodite who also died an untimely death at a young age.

Adonais Summary

Shelley in this poem changes the spelling of “Adonis” to “Adonais”, and he makes Urania the mother of Adonais, not his beloved, in order to keep out the erotic element from his elegy. Adonais is Shelley’s elegy on the death of John Keats. Keats died at Rome, aged twenty-five, on 23 rd February, 1821, of tuberculosis.
